Verdi's "Aida" at The Gaiety Theatre

The Dublin Grand Opera Society opened their Spring season at the Gaiety Theatre last night with Verdi's "Aida." The choice was an excellent one for the opera contains some of Verdi's best music, while the picturesque authentic background of the plot gives the work special interest.

The general standard of performance was very good. Lieut.-Col. Doyle conducted and Sydney Russell was responsible for the production. There was some uncertainty in the first act, natural enough on an opening night—the Temple scene, for instance, might be made more impressive. But the remainder of the opera went really well.

The caste was a good one. Ruth Packer gave a fine interpretation of the role of Aida. Her tone was at times weak, but she acted convincingly, and in Act 3 her singing and general performance were excellent. Patricia Black was most satisfactory as Amneris—her style and presence were dramatic.

Frank Sale sang the part of Radames very well, and Henry Gill that of Amanasro. Other successful performances were those of Dermot Browner (High Priest) and Sam Mooney (King of Egypt).

The orchestra, led by Terry O'Connor, played well, especially in Act 3, and the chorus did good work in Act 2.

G. O'B.

OTHER THEATRES

GATE—"Rosmersholm" is retained.

ROYAL—Douglas Dee and Dale are an unusual musical combination. Hilda Heath, who sings and dances, and Peter Bernard "the Maestro of Songsters," are two other good turns.

Eddie Byrne's "Double or Nothing" feature still ranks high, as do the Royalties, who, assisted by the orchestra, present a special U.S. Navy number.

OLYMPIA—The two Leslies are at the top of a bill of twelve turns. The O'Neill Sisters provide music, a song, and a touch of humour, and Eva May Wong has an attractive conjuring act. Others are Jack Cruise and Joe Duffy, comedians; James McGovern, baritone; Kisma and Karem, dancers; Anne Grayson, singer; Bob and Rema, and Harry Pringle, comedian.

QUEEN'S—"April Sings" is variety with a strong national flavour, containing sketches, songs, comedy and ballet. Al Beale, with clarinet and saxophone; Gloria Greene, ever-popular in "Thanks for the Memory" series; Cecil Nash, Mick Eustace, Bill Brady, Frank Howard and Kay O'Toole in amusing sketches; Paddy Tyrrell, songs; Jimmy Harvey in "That Song and Dance Man," and Alec C. Fryer and the orchestra with the Rockettes round off a good programme.

PEACOCK—Mucross Players appear in "Quiet Wedding"—production by P. J. O'Connor.
